The actor also shared some information about his environmentalism in an interview for the Washington Post. "It's our responsibility to protect our biosphere. We're destroying it at a rapid pace. We have made a conscious decision to destroy our planet. And what we've seen from young people and from scientists in the last several years is that there is a real crisis happening," said DiCaprio. "They're having trouble getting into graduate programs, they're having trouble paying their rent, they're having trouble finding jobs." He also noted that some of his friends, who are young, are talking about going on a “geocaching” adventure. “They’re 18 or 19 years old and they’re going out and they’re hiding things in the great outdoors to track it back to the people who are responsible for them. I’ve been on a number of those adventures.

It is extremely rewarding and really fun,” said DiCaprio. originally appeared in The Week. Donald Trump said he would build a wall on our southern border, and his supporters thought this wouldn't happen. A wall is a wall, they thought. Trump would not take away people's access to the country's most popular summer vacation spot. And so we got a wall. While many Democrats were content to sit on the sidelines and point at the wall as the president's responsibility, many Republicans were dumbfounded. Why? Because they have been hoping that the president would completely capitulate on his campaign promises. Some of the president's impetuous supporters had hoped he would follow through on a promise to limit the number of refugees entering
